Save our Green!

SAVE OUR GREEN!

Residents in the Western Park Estate have lodged 160 objections against plans to develop a much used green space into housing.

The green on Finch Close, which has been used by local children for over 40 years, is the subject of a vocal campaign by residents.

Their aim is to lobby the Council to prevent the building of seven houses and parking, by having the green declared as common ground.

Over 40 local people, with children in tow, arrived at the green to raise awareness of their campaign, which is supported by local councillors and Leicester West M.P Liz Kendall.

Greetings From The Editor

This month, plans to turn a Western Park green into a housing development, get the thumbs down from residents. Helen Knott has a another giant tantrum and our local historian, Roger Blackmore, heads back a hundred years to the time of a legendary Leicester Olympian.

We also get the latest from Hinckley Road Policing Unit, Tony Huxley, gets busy in the garden and Richard Perry looks at what store cards know about us. Too much as it turns out.

Our website now includes RSS feeds which mean the latest Gazette stories directly can be downloaded into your browser. You can also keep up to date with the latest local, national and international events, showbiz gossip, gardening and recipes. There are also feeds to Leicester City Council, the Police and a look at some of the world's odder stories.

It's very simple. Just click a link and off you go! We have even joined up with our friends at Radio Duck! So you can listen to some classic hits and new music as you surf! Not AaarrF!

And we have a another great competition where you can win a meal for two at The Hot Rock Grill on Braunstone Gate.

Under 2006 legislation, local green spaces used by the community can be protected by having them declared Town Greens.

But residents must prove that they have had unrestricted access to the land for over twenty years for recreational use.

Di Driver one of the organisers of the campaign says, "Lots of people use the green. Many have deeds to their houses which says the land was given for community use only. If we succeed in our campaign, this will be the first Town Green in Leicester."

A decision is pending from the City Council Planning Office.

With the London Olympics only just over a year away, 2012 will mark the hundredth anniversary of the winning of Olympic Gold by a Leicester fish-mongers daughter.

SWIMMING FOR GOLD

Legendary freestyle swimmer Jennie Fletcher whose family ran a fish shop in Belgrave, first learned to swim whilst a pupil at Mellor Road School.

In 1906 she became Leicester's all round swimming champion and in the next few years became Britain's leading amateur lady swimmer, breaking numerous records in the process. In the same year 2000 spectators at Cossington Street Baths saw her become the new English 100 yards Swimming Champion.

She was only able to train after working 12 hours a day, six days a week. Despite their poor circumstances, her parents refused to allow Jennie to tour as a professional with Annette Kellerman in 1907. She remained an amateur, winning six ASA 100 yards freestyle titles between 1906 and 1912 and in 1909 setting a world record for the distance.

Jennie became a household name, attracting large crowds and was not surprisingly picked to compete in the 1912 Summer Olympics held in Stockholm. Here she won bronze in the 100 metres freestyle before going on to win a gold medal in the 4x100 metre relay.

Retiring from the sport in 1913, she married a local Leicester lad Henry Hyslop and the couple moved to Canada. She died in 1968 at the age of 78.

Whilst holding the office of Lord Mayor, it was a huge honour last year to open up Leicester's own Walk of Fame in the Cultural Quarter including a plaque commemorating Jennie Fletcher and her achievements and at the same time to meet two of her descendants in person. Her niece still lives in Glenfield. Jennie achieved all this and really put ladies swimming on the Olympic map at a time when women did not even have the vote!

Crows Nest - Pirate Kingdom

Sponsored Article

Pirates of the Caribbean have absolutely nothing on this!

Captain Ray Cooper and First Mate Yvette Jayes of the good ship Crows Nest have brought a buccaneering touch to the land lubbers of West Leicester.

They have created, Leicester's first Pirate Kingdom right on the front of the Crows Nest pub on Glenfield Road.

Ray and Yvette realised that there was nowhere for families to take their children and enjoy a quiet drink in the area, so they hatched a plan to persuade the Everards Brewery to help fund a play area for the under 10's.

Ray said: "It's taken three years of negotiations and now we've done it!

We got the pirate theme from the name of the pub, so now families can sit outside and watch their kids enjoy this new facility."

The play area includes a wooden pirate ship climbing frame, bouncy castle and safety flooring.

"Everyone's put a lot of work in," says Ray, "I'd like to thank Richard and Michael Tate and Jason Carroll from Red Monkey for installing the equipment and supplying a lot of extras to the play area for free.

We hope our Pirate Kingdom will bring a lot of pleasure to our customers, old and new."

Western Park Bowling Club

There has been a men's bowling club on western park for 102 years and a ladies Club or 92 years. Both Clubhouses have all the facilities, enabling anyone interested in learning to play, to join in and enjoy the sport.

There are opportunities to play in club friendly matches against other clubs in and around Leicester. We have our own internal competitions, also, one can play casual 'roll-ups' anytime.

The clubhouse green is central to Western park itself and is a wonderful place to be on. With fine weather and fresh air, it is a superb environment to meet and socialise with friends you make.

There is coaching for new and existing members, with some social events arranged throughout the year.

All ages can take part and visitors are always welcome, so come and find out more about the sport.

KNOTT'S LANDING

Helen Knott

Everything seems to be a fight at the moment. On Western Park we recently had the shock of proposals for a big residential care home on the old school site. People are fighting against the closure of old people's homes but nothing comes close to the horror of a 4,250 home development out by Leicester Forest East.

I have a friend who lives in the Thorpe Astley estate and I got the chance to look at the map showing the proposed development running from where Beggars Lane joins the A47 at Leicester Forest East all the way down to Enderby and bordered by the M1 and Beggars Lane. It will put around 1,000 acres of beautiful, productive farmland under a concrete blanket and it will surround and perhaps destroy forever the deserted medieval village of Lubbesthorpe.

They are, essentially, building a new town about the size of Market Harborough just up the road and, if you think it won't affect us here, then think again. The people who live in this development will most likely be coming into the city to work. The chances of them using the A47 to do that are quite high. This means at the very least lots more traffic, more air pollution and more noise for us, even though we live quite a distance from the site. So now we have another battle on our hands.

I understand we have a housing shortage in this country but surely developing brownfield sites is a better policy than wiping out our countryside. Why can't the governments take housing out of the politicians hands and have a national, sustainable housing policy that shifts development away from the south and uses some of the vast tracts of empty housing and barren land up north? Why can't the developments that do get approved have to have sustainable eco-credentials (why isn't there a rule that all new houses come with solar panels on them?) and interesting architecture so not every town looks the same. I have a dream...

Is there any point to filling in the Census form? Richard Perry thinks not. If the Government wants the details - they could just ask the supermarkets. They know all about us anyway...

Nice Box - What's in it? Richard Perry

Most of us have supermarket loyalty cards. If you've got a Tesco's card, you're one of 15 million users whilst Sainsbury's say their loyalty card is now the most popular in the UK.

Although card users can expect discounts, the real reason for their existence is marketing. Loyalty cards technology is a sophisticated way of generating data about you.

Every time you swipe your card, for those oh so valuable points, the store will know who you are, your address and contact details, what you bought, how much you spent, when and how often you went there and how you paid for it.

They can work out, from your post code and till receipt, your social grouping, any changes in family structure and have a fair stab at guessing your household disposable income. They will also be able to extract your buying history and "suggest" more product by waving the tempting offer of a few extra store points to get you to spend more. They will be able to detect if you cut down or increase your spending or if you change your buying pattern. If you're going on holiday - they will know because you bought sun screen. If there's a really big change, like you stop using the store, or suddenly start buying nappies, that will be flagged up and an envelope with some targeted offers will drop on the mat. It really is quite clever and designed to make you go back again and again.

With the economic climate really starting to pinch, staying loyal to a store because of their card is becoming harder for consumers. A recent Which survey found that on pricing, Aldi and Liddle out performed the big four supermarkets and another from UBS Bank says the increase in raw food materials like eggs and meat is 3%, but supermarket pricing is up 6%.

Additionally consumers are sitting on an estimated £5 billion worth of unclaimed loyalty points.

I sense a perfect storm brewing...

Lets spend the lot and see what happens!

Tony Huxley's Garden Tidings

Tense, frustrated, angry? If so it would be cruel to kick the cat, so why not release the pressure by pruning a Buddleja. Go on, give it hell - it can take it, and will love you for it.

Since moving house last autumn I've been trying to prune at least one tree or shrub a week. Eventually I've got to the Buddlejas. First was a large Buddleja globosa. Introduced from South America in the 18th century it has hundreds of small round orange coloured flowers in the summer. This should have been pruned after flowering last year but it'll just have to tolerate a spring trim. At over 4m (15ft) tall and wide it was engulfing all in its path. I kept the shape of its domed crown but reduced the size by a third, removing some of the larger branches that were crossing and rubbing. Next I tackled the B.Davidii, the "Butterfly Bush" we all know, but not all love. In just over a century they have colonised all but the bleakest areas of Britain. I confess to being a fan. The intense coloured cone shape flower panicles are magnets to bees and butterflies and the heavy, sweet perfume is the smell of hot summer afternoons. This week it met the less poetic charms of Mr Chainsaw. Now that gnarled and rampant tree has been tamed and my spleen vented. Luckily Davidii tolerate aggressive pruning as they can easily put out 2m (6ft) of growth in a year. Spring is the ideal time to prune them. Buddleja often become congested, so thin it, starting with crossing or damaged branches. Cut to an outward facing bud. Don't be afraid to cut out larger sections that hamper an open framework. Finally reduce the height to allow for the expected summer growth.

Then relax...
